

Number Sixteen

Kit Kemp's custom textiles in each of the individually outfitted rooms are a study in elaborate detail and dramatic patterns. A picture of classic Victorian architecture, the structure presents a white façade with black wrought-iron railings. With balustrades and column-supported porticoes perfectly in concert with its surroundings, only the house number suggests that the white-stucco Victorian terrace is a hotel and not an upscale private residence. And it's all situated just steps from London's major museums and Harrods.
